Mr. Porter experienced much difficulty in getting out of Germany, where he had been for the past year. In Cologne he was held up for two days waiting for the officials to examine his baggage and he was forced to go 36 hours with only two crackers and a small glass of milk. The hotels were deserted and it was difficult to find lodging. By riding 250 miles on a cattle train, the car doors being locked the greater part of the distance, he finally reached the coast, and two weeks ago was allowed to book passage on a boat bound for New York.
